

River Crossing

I came to a river today,
There was no bridge for me to take.
The rough hewn trail to its cliff-lined shores
Put my sanity at stake.

As I fell into the deep,
I felt, all along the fall,
Hands of angels reaching out,
Responding to my desperate call.

And as I plunged into the swift,
Roaring waters of unknown,
An immediate understanding
I am one of many, not alone.

Others sink, others drown,
As I was lifted to the crest,
Heart, life and limb were pain-consumed,
On angels' breasts my head did rest.

As I passed from one t'other,
Love's lifeline kept my heart afloat,
As sanity recovered,
A chapter of life was rewrote.

As each angel passed me on,
Closer, nearer to other shore,
I saddened and then I smiled,
Wishing less, wanting more.

More of love, more of you,
An angel of many faces,
I am devoted through and through,
Finding you so many places.

Once ashore I dream, I hope,
That life's trail travels on,
But with you now by my side,
Forevermore, forevermore.
